

Isidora Pop-Lazić

Research Associate, Institute of International Politics and Economics– Centre for Neighbouring and Mediterranean Countries.

Isidora is a Research Associate at Institute of International Politics and Economics (Belgrade, Serbia) and a PhD Candidate at Faculty of Political Science, University of Belgrade, at the International and European Studies

Programme. At the same Faculty she obtained an undergraduate and master's degree as well as specialist studies degree in field of terrorism and organized crime. She has participated in many seminars, conferences and workshops, as well as International Summer and Winter Schools in Serbia and abroad. She received a scholarships from the Ministry of Science, the City of Belgrade and the Journalists' Association of Serbia.

Isidora's PhD thesis concerns contemporary Serbo-Croatian relations in the context of EU integration. During her PhD thesis research she spent two months in Zagreb at the Faculty of Political Sciences, University of Zagreb as a visiting researcher and CEEPUS scholarship holder. She is author and co-author of several scientific papers, published both in scientific journals and proceedings. In addition, she wrote numerous book reviews.

The core areas of her academic interest include International Relations, International Organisations, Contemporary Balkan Relations, History of Balkan Relations, European Integration and Theories of International Relations.

Google Scholar Profile: <https://scholar.google.com/citations?user=qhgC9IAAAAJ&hl=en>