Short Biography (up to 200 words):

Shary Mitidieri is a PhD candidate in International Studies, with a dissertation on the failure of the diplomatic peace process in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

After a Master's Degree in International Relations and another in International Strategic-Military Studies, Shary has spent 9 months as an international volunteer in Bosnia and Herzegovina, taking advantage of the opportunity to deepen her knowledge of the Western Balkans and her understanding of the political, social, and economic dynamics in the area.

Apart from her academic endeavors, she has worked in NGOs and International Organizations, including NATO, honing her research skills and gaining a new perspective on international cooperation and development.

Her interests range from social and anthropological issues to the political and geostrategic opportunities and challenges encountered by International Organizations in the Western Balkans and South-East Mediterranean.
